Genital Warts

This is the name that is applied to warts that men suffer in the groin or on the penis. Most commonly, genital warts come up in clusters and are clearly visible. Given that they are most commonly passed from one sexual partner to another during unprotected sex, the simple way of ensuring that warts of this nature do not occur is to avoid sexual encounters with those who have them.

As suggested previously, it is possible for genital warts to infect both sexes, with the female version being known as 'vaginal warts'.

A third variation is anal warts which are small clusters of the same warts that appear around the anal hole which are once again sexually transmitted. However, in the same way that vaginal warts may not be visible if they have infected the cervix, so anal warts may be invisible if they are only present inside the anus.

Another important consideration is that genital, vaginal or anal warts do not have to be visible for any individual to be a carrier of the HPV virus.

Hence, it is possible that you could be infected by someone who has no outward signs of infection if you are not practicing safe sex (or abstaining).

According to the statistics reported by Wikipedia, it is believed that HPV is the most commonly contracted sexually transmitted disease in the USA. In fact, it is estimated that 75-80% of sexually active Americans will contract HPV at some time in their life while the Center for Disease Control (CDC) suggests that some 80% of US woman will have contracted at least one strain of HPV before they reach age 50.

Given all of these statistics and suggestions, there can be little doubt that the chances of being infected with one of the HPV strains that cause anogenital warts (between them, HPV strains 6 and 11 are responsible for 90% of cases) is remarkably high. There can therefore be no argument against the suggestion that anyone suffering from warts of this nature should do whatever is necessary to prevent them infecting other people.

However, it is important to understand that home remedies are not appropriate for the treatment of genital warts. While there are various products that are claimed to get rid of genital warts completely naturally it is a good idea to talk with a doctor about diagnosis and treatment options.

I was diagnosed with genital warts over a year ago. When I found out I was embarrassed, sad, scared, and angry. I didn't know what to do so I went to the doctor's office. I was given a cream to apply to the infected areas. When I put the cream on it burned so bad I thought I was going to die. So I quit using the cream. That's when I started reading online about the various remedies available other than expensive and painful surgeries or prescription medications. I found a TON of stuff. I learned a lot and even tried a few products (none that really worked). I started to lose hope that I was just going to have to live with the problem.

That's when I came across a website that offered some great advice. The author had suffered from genital warts to and had changed his diet, exercised, quit smoking, and used a product called Wartrol and he said his genital warts went away in just 2 Weeks!

I was skeptical but desperate so I gave it a shot. I didn't smoke so I didn't have to quit but I did eat out a lot (at Taco Bell especially) so I had to cut back on that. I started running a bit too. The warts I had started to fade but they weren't going away completely. That's when I ordered Wartrol. This product really works. I tried a few other products online but none of them worked. Wartrol did. In just a few days of using Wartrol my warts went away COMPLETELY! So just after 3 weeks my warts were gone. This was over 6 months ago and they haven't come back.

So I HIGHLY RECOMMEND that you change your diet, exercise, and use Wartrol. You may not have to change your diet a lot and exercise more if you buy Wartrol because it helps boost your immune system so that your body can get rid of the warts. This is really the only way they will go away forever and not come back.

Immunity in the Body and Genital Warts

Our immune system is really an amazing thing and whenever it is working properly, we have far fewer problems as a result. There are a number of reasons why our immune system tends to break down as we get older. For the most part, it is a problem with us not treating our body properly either through the diet that we eat or the amount of exercise that we get. It may also be a result of our being chronically dehydrated, a problem that many of us tend to ignore. Whenever our immunity is low, we are susceptible to a number of different problems which would include increased colds and even genital warts.

Genital warts are caused by a certain type of virus that we pick up in the environment around us. Typically, it enters into the skin through a damaged area which can easily be found around the area of the fingernails. That is why people who chew their fingernails on a regular basis often get these genital warts more readily and even see them spread easier. Unfortunately, medical science does not have anything that can be done in order to help with genital warts outside of getting rid of any existing problems that we may have. The virus that causes the genital warts still lives on in the background.

Building up your immune system is really not all that difficult if you put your mind to it. Most of us can see where we need to improve our diets to a certain extent and by adding in additional raw fruits and vegetables to our diet on a daily basis, we can adjust it in the right direction. The same is also true of the amount of exercise that we get. Most of us know that we should be exercising on a daily basis but very few of us actually do it. By getting out and moving we will give our body an opportunity to be stronger on the inside. Hydrating yourself it's easy to do, simply drink more water daily and you will notice a difference in your health.

By building up our immunity through doing these three different things, we are giving ourselves an opportunity to overcome with genital warts once and for all. If our body is able to successfully fight off the virus and to overcome it, we will not have genital warts and all any longer and any existing genital warts will disappear.

Is It Okay to Snip or Slice Off Genital Warts?

Did you realize that warts can be passed from person to person? This is because they are caused by a type of virus that is known as HPV. This virus is usually contracted by sexual intercourse and then it enters into the skin where it is damaged, usually around the areas of the genitals. That is why most of us tend to experience warts in the area of genitals or anus. Since it is a virus, it is also possible for it to spread to other areas of our body as well. This would commonly occur because of oral sex, picking at the warts, or simply by not taking care to avoid touching the area of the wart.

One of the ways that many of us try to get rid of the wart is by snipping it off with fingernail clippers or slicing them with a razor. It is a relatively simple thing for us to do this because there are no nerve endings inside of the wart itself. Please DO NOT do this. There may be some reasons why you would want to avoid doing this, especially because of the danger of spreading the wart to other areas of your body. Not only that, it is typically an ineffective way of getting rid of the problem because you are unable to get to the entire root of the problem by removing the core.

There are always going to be options that are available whenever you are trying to get rid of something. Make sure that you do not snip the warts off of your body or cut them with a razor, however, because it is ineffective and can even make them worse. Whenever you have a problem with warts, you need to use something that was created to cure it.

Medical Options For Genital Warts

Because genital warts are caused by a virus, most of the time they are bound to surface again because the virus that caused them is always lurking somewhere in the system. So treatment can usually take a long time requiring a lot of commitment from the patient. Several forms of medication are available to deal with the symptoms, some of which are applied directly to the skin:

Using injections of Interferon - The doctor injects the Interferon directly into the wart. Interferon is a chemical that your body makes to fight infection. It is thought that this procedure will help your body's immune system fight off the infection. The downside to this procedure is that it has to be done twice a week for up to 8 weeks and it costs about $200 a treatment. That's a LOT of money!

Imiquimod - this is a cream that is meant to assist the immune system's ability to deal with the warts. While on treatment the patient is usually advised to avoid sexual contact as it may affect your sexual partner's skin and when condoms are used it is known to weaken them, adding the risk to the other party.

LEEP (Loop Electrosurgical Excision Procedure) - This method involves the doctor taking a sharp instrument (shaped like a loop) and cutting underneath the wart to remove it from the skin. This procedure can be effective but it can leave scars and it also does not work on the root symptoms and causes of the virus so it's not a real cure for genital warts.

Podophyllin - this is in a family of natural resins that are applied directly by your doctor. They are known to attack and eliminate the warts completely. Being such a strong medication, the doctors will almost always apply the first dose to the patient and give strict instructions to be followed while it is used at home.

Trichloroacetic acid-(TCA). This is a chemical formula used to burn off the warts where they appear and is usually applied by the medical practitioner.

Liquid Nitrogen - This must be administered in a doctors office. The doctor will take liquid nitrogen and through a procedure called cryotherapy he or she will apply the nitrogen to the infected areas. The downside to this treatment is that it can be very painful and it requires MULTIPLE visits to the doctor's office.
